Top 10 must-reserve New York restaurants

26 shares

If your name isn't on the list, you won't get a table at New York's finest restaurants (Picture: duha127)
Planning a trip to the Big Apple? According to New York-based food writer and blogger Sarah Zorn, these are the eating experiences you need to book in advance.

1. Le Bernardin

'Eric Ripert's Midtown shellfish palace is the ultimate splurge for seafood lovers.'

2. The Chef's Table at Brooklyn Fare

'This 18-seat supper club is Brooklyn's only three Michelin-starred restaurant. It's also the hardest to snag a reservation for.'

3. Blanca

'It is a task and a half to score a reservation at this wonderful tasting restaurant, overseen by inventive chef Carlos Mirarchi.'

4. Tanoreen

'This Middle Eastern restaurant is known for making some of the best Palestinian food in the city. It expanded to a space three times its original size four years ago, but it remains a very hard place to get into. Even chef/owner Rawia Bishara's husband has trouble scoring a table!'

5. Blue Hill at Stone Barns

'You have to call months in advance to get a reservation at Dan Barber's seminal farm-to-table restaurant, but it's well worth it, as is the 90 -minute road trip outside of the city.'

6. Daniel

'Daniel Boulud's flagship restaurant is the be-all-end-all when it comes to fine dining in NYC.'

7. Momofuku Noodle Bar

'Reservations are optional if you're only after noodles, but they're a must if you're craving Momofuku's fried chicken, which is served as a large format, family-style meal.'

8. Osteria Morini

'Michael White is known as the king of Italian cuisine in NYC. This comparatively casual trattoria is situated in Soho and provides the best showcase for his delectable hand-cranked pastas.'

9. Peter Luger

'At 125 years of age, this throwback steakhouse is officially Brooklyn's oldest restaurant. Don't bother with the menu, because there's really only one acceptable order. Ask for the glorious porterhouse, which arrives pre-carved and sizzling on a ceramic plate.'

10. Eleven Madison Park

'If you manage to bag a coveted table at this unfailingly elegant tasting menu-only restaurant, remember to arrive hungry and with an open mind. Chef Daniel Humm is known for sending out an endless progression of highly conceptualised dishes.'

Sarah Zorn is the food editor of Brooklyn Magazine, an associate editor of restaurantgirl.com and author of Brooklyn Chef's Table, which includes stories of and recipes from 60 of Brooklyn's most influential restaurants.

I agree with all entries and have dined at several of them myself. Only one that I absolutley disagree on, and that is Peter Luger. Totally over over over rated steakhouse. I have eaten at at least 7 other steakhouses in NYC ( Delmonico's, strip house, STK, Bull & Bear and others) that were all by far better than Peter Luger. Their steaks were a disappointment to say the least. No taste what so ever and had it not been for the steak sauce they provide it would have been a total waste of money
